Success or failure often rests on the quality and reputation of individuals – a single indiscretion can be devastating and may even spell the end of a company, brand name, careers and more. Most mergers & acquisitions fail not because of poor business plans, but rather management error. In today's business world, the margin for error is smaller than ever. As such, organizations must be effective in their due diligence efforts in vetting management teams, key officers & directors, venture partners, vendors & suppliers, portfolio managers, and other key individuals such as witnesses, politicians and others. Christopher T. Marquet, founder and CEO of Marquet International Ltd. and veteran due diligence & investigations expert, will be presenting on this topic.
