One key factor in the success or failure in legal disputes is the quality, reputation and track record of the parties involved. A tainted witness, an impeachable expert or a flawed litigant can make or break a case, regardless of the facts or merits. As such, counsel must properly vet all of the key parties – plaintiffs, defendants, witnesses and experts – in order to maximize the probability of success. Christopher T. Marquet, CEO of Marquet International, a leading investigative and litigation support firm based in the Northeast, will present on this important topic.
